What Are the Fallacies Underlying Population and Birth Control Ideologies?

Sixbert SANGWA • August 25, 2024

In the contemporary discourse on sustainable development, a deeply troubling ideology has gained traction: the belief that controlling births and reducing the global population are essential strategies for ensuring a sustainable future. This narrative, widely embraced in developed nations, suggests that limiting the number of births will reduce the strain on the world's resources, leading to a more balanced and sustainable planet. Proponents argue that a smaller population will consume fewer resources, resulting in less environmental stress and better management of the planet's limited resources.

However, this ideology is fundamentally flawed and stands in direct contradiction to biblical principles. It reflects a profound lack of trust in God's provision and represents a misguided attempt to rely on human wisdom rather than divine guidance. Moreover, this perspective aligns with the sinister agendas of secret societies and the concept of a New World Order, ultimately serving the interests of a small, elite group that owns the majority of the world's resources and seeks to control global populations to maintain their power and influence.

To understand the depth of this deception, it is crucial to explore the biblical mandate for human life, the economic fallacies behind population control, and the spiritual warfare that underpins these ideologies. This article will delve into the deceptive nature of this teaching, its roots in a lack of faith, and the profound spiritual, economic, and social implications of embracing such a worldview.

The Biblical Mandate: God's Command to "Be Fruitful and Multiply"

From the very beginning of creation, God's command to humanity was clear: "Be fruitful, multiply, fill the earth, and subdue it" (Genesis 1:28). This directive is not a mere suggestion; it is a divine command reflecting God's design and purpose for humanity. To advocate for birth control and population reduction as a means of sustainable development is to directly oppose this divine mandate. This ideology mirrors the rebellion seen at the Tower of Babel, where humanity sought to resist God's command to spread across the earth, choosing instead to establish their own way (Genesis 11:9). God disrupted their plans by confusing their language, demonstrating that rebellion against His commands brings confusion and disorder.

Similarly, the modern push for population control seeks to resist God's command to fill the earth. It is an attempt by humanity to establish its own understanding of sustainability and progress, separate from God's wisdom and design. The notion that reducing human life could lead to better management of resources or a more balanced world is a direct contradiction to God's intention for human flourishing. God created the earth with the capacity to sustain a growing population, provided humanity lives in obedience to His principles.

The Economic Fallacy: Population Control as a Misguided Solution

The ideology of population control claims that Earth's resources cannot sustain a growing population, directly contradicting the biblical teaching that God created a world capable of supporting all life. This view disregards God's promise in Genesis 8:22: "As long as the earth endures, seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night will never cease." Furthermore, Psalm 104:24 proclaims, "How countless are your works, Lord! In wisdom you have made them all; the earth is full of your creatures." Scripture clearly portrays God as the ultimate provider, sustaining all life and meeting the needs of His people (Philippians 4:19). Even in teaching His disciples to pray, Jesus included a request for daily bread, emphasizing that God attends to even the most basic needs of His children (Matthew 6:11). These verses highlight God's abundant provision and the sustainability of His creation.

Crucially, the argument that reducing population is necessary for economic sustainability is deeply flawed. Historical and empirical evidence shows that population growth often goes hand in hand with economic innovation and development. Take China, for example—with the world's largest population, it has achieved remarkable economic growth, becoming a global leader in technological innovation and economic productivity. This reality challenges the notion that a large population hinders economic development. Instead, it suggests that a larger population can be a valuable asset, offering a rich pool of talent, creativity, and labor.

Moreover, the Bible tells us that children are a heritage from the Lord, a reward from Him (Psalm 127:3). Each child born into the world represents not just another mouth to feed but a potential source of creativity, innovation, and problem-solving. The issue at hand is not the number of people but rather the sinful behaviors. God has designed the world with a capacity for growth and abundance, and He calls His people to trust in His provision rather than rely on their own understanding.

When we limit population growth, we potentially stifle the development of God-given talents, which are essential for overcoming the challenges facing humanity today. Human beings are not a burden to the earth but a blessing, each endowed with unique gifts and abilities that can contribute to the betterment of society. The Bible warns against leaning on our own understanding and encourages us to trust in the Lord with all our heart (Proverbs 3:5-6). This trust in God's provision and wisdom is crucial as we address global challenges and seek sustainable solutions.

The Deception of Sustainability: A Misguided Narrative

The argument that reducing the global population is necessary for sustainability is a deceptive narrative. This ideology fails to address the real issues that threaten the planet—namely, human greed, waste, and mismanagement of resources. The Bible teaches that the earth is the Lord's and everything in it (Psalm 24:1), and humanity has been given the responsibility to steward it wisely. The problem is not the number of people but the sinful nature of humanity, which leads to overconsumption, environmental degradation, and social inequality.

Instead of focusing on reducing the population, a biblical approach to sustainability would emphasize responsible stewardship, generosity, and justice. God has provided enough resources for all of humanity, but these resources must be managed according to His principles of righteousness and justice. The belief that the earth cannot sustain a growing population undercuts God's omnipotence and His provision. It places human wisdom above divine wisdom, suggesting that humans know better than their Creator how to manage His creation.

Spiritual Deception: Aligning with the Spirit of the Antichrist

The push for population control is more than just a political or economic issue; it is a profound spiritual deception rooted in human wisdom that contradicts biblical truth. This ideology, often presented as a rational approach to global challenges, aligns with the Bible's warnings about the last days, where false teachings and doctrines of demons will arise, leading many away from the truth (1 Timothy 4:1). The modern push for population control exemplifies this false wisdom, revealing a form of rebellion against God's commands and a lack of faith in His ability to sustain His creation.

This deceptive teaching aligns with the spirit of the Antichrist, who seeks to deceive nations and oppose everything God has ordained. Satan, who has been a murderer from the beginning (John 8:44), continues his agenda to destroy what God has created. The ideology of population control can be seen as an extension of this satanic agenda—an attempt to reduce the number of image-bearers of God on earth and to thwart God's plan for humanity.

It's disheartening that many embrace these teachings merely to gain social acceptance, aligning themselves with contemporary norms while dismissing the wisdom of our ancestors and Scripture's emphasis on trusting God's provision and the sanctity of human life. The apostle Paul cautions against being deceived by the "wisdom of this world," which God considers foolishness (1 Corinthians 3:19). The current push for population control exemplifies this false wisdom, revealing a rebellion against God's commands and a lack of faith in His ability to sustain His creation. This aligns with the spirit of the Antichrist, who aims to deceive nations and oppose all that God has ordained.

This deception forms part of a broader spiritual warfare against God's kingdom, subtly leading people astray from the truth and paving the way for global deception. By limiting births, we risk stifling the development of God-given talents crucial for addressing humanity's challenges. This approach aligns with the goals of leading secret societies and their concept of a New World Order, potentially serving the interests of a small, elite group seeking to control global populations and maintain their power. As Christians, we must remain vigilant, recognizing that by embracing God's principles for stewardship and sustainability, we align ourselves with His eternal kingdom rather than the fleeting wisdom of this world.

Creativity and Innovation: God's Greatest Resources

Human beings, created in God's image, are endowed with creativity, intelligence, and the capacity for innovation. Every child born brings the potential for problem-solving and advancement. These qualities are our greatest resources for human development and societal progress. God has gifted each individual with unique talents, and it's through nurturing these gifts that societies flourish. Each newborn carries distinct potential to enhance society and further knowledge, technology, and culture. Limiting births restricts human innovation and undermines the foundation of economic and social growth. Advocating for birth control essentially promotes squandering our world's most precious resource—human creativity.
The Bible affirms that we are "fearfully and wonderfully made" (Psalm 139:14), and that each person has a unique role to play in God's plan. By discouraging births, we are, in essence, denying the potential contributions that these unborn individuals could make to society. This is a loss not just to the individual but to the world as a whole, which misses out on the blessings that these individuals could bring.

The True Path to Sustainable Development

True sustainable development does not require reducing the population but rather a commitment to living according to God's principles. This includes practicing justice, righteousness, stewardship, and love for one's neighbor. When humanity aligns itself with God's will and purpose, there is no need to fear overpopulation or resource scarcity. God is able to provide abundantly for all His creation, as He has promised in His Word (Philippians 4:19).

Instead of promoting population control, we should be advocating for policies and practices that reflect God's heart for justice, stewardship, and care for the earth. This includes addressing the root causes of poverty, promoting economic policies that ensure equitable distribution of resources, and fostering a culture of responsibility and stewardship.

The Elite's Agenda: Controlling the World Through False Teachings

Population control is often associated with the agendas of secret societies and the concept of a New World Order. These groups are thought to be working towards a centralized global government that aims to control every aspect of human life, including birth rates, to exert maximum influence over the world's population. They view population reduction as a means to create a more manageable world, fitting into a larger plan to establish the Antichrist as the ruler of this global government, as foretold in the Bible (Revelation 13:16-17). This ideology of population control aligns with this framework, as it seeks to weaken natural family structures and diminish the influence of faith communities. A smaller population is easier to manipulate and control, which corresponds with the Antichrist's agenda to unify the world under his authority. This deception is part of the spiritual warfare against God's kingdom, subtly leading people away from the truth and paving the way for global deception.

A closer look at the population control narrative reveals that it often serves the interests of a small, elite group that controls most of the world's resources. According to various reports, a tiny fraction of the population owns over 90% of global resources. These elites use their power and influence to promote ideologies that align with their agenda of maintaining control and dominance over the world. Population control is one such ideology.

By advocating for a reduced population, these elites aim to create a more manageable and controllable world. A smaller population is easier to manipulate and govern, reducing potential resistance or opposition to their rule. This aligns with the agenda of the New World Order and secret societies that seek to establish a centralized global government, as foretold in biblical prophecy (Revelation 13:7). The promotion of population control serves to weaken natural family structures, reduce the influence of faith communities, and create a more pliable population that is easier to dominate.

Moreover, the spread of false teachings about population control and sustainability benefits these elites by diverting attention from the real issues facing the world—namely, the unequal distribution of resources and the exploitation of the poor and vulnerable. The Bible teaches that God's design for humanity includes justice, righteousness, and equitable distribution of resources (Isaiah 58:6-7). Yet, the elite's agenda contradicts this design, instead seeking to consolidate power and wealth at the expense of the broader population.

Conclusion: Upholding the Sanctity of Life

As Christians, we are called to be discerning and vigilant in the face of false teachings and deceptive ideologies. The belief that controlling births is necessary for sustainable development is not only a lie but a dangerous teaching that contradicts God's Word. It aligns with the agendas of secret societies and the spirit of the Antichrist, which seek to undermine God's plan for humanity and prepare the way for global deception. We must reject this false narrative and uphold the sanctity of life, recognizing that every life is a gift from God and that His command to "be fruitful and multiply" is as relevant today as it was in the beginning. By embracing God's principles for stewardship and sustainability, we can work towards a world that honors God's creation and fulfills His purposes for humanity. Let us remain steadfast in our commitment to the truth, recognizing that in doing so, we align ourselves with God's eternal Kingdom, which will never be shaken.
